Before you start calculating payroll, it's essential to understand the key components involved, including tax withholding, workers' compensation, and benefits. In North Carolina, employers must withhold state income tax, which ranges from 4.75% to 5.25%, depending on the employee's income level. Additionally, employers must also obtain workers' compensation insurance to cover work-related injuries or illnesses. To begin calculating payroll, you'll need to determine the employee's gross income, which includes wages, bonuses, and commissions. You'll then need to withhold federal income tax, as well as state income tax, using the employee's tax withholding election form, W-4. Workers' compensation premiums are also calculated using the employee's gross income and a rate determined by the state. When it comes to benefits, employers in North Carolina must consider offering health, dental, and vision insurance, as well as 401(k) or 403(b) plans. Payroll deductions for these benefits are usually managed through a third-party administrator or a payroll software. Employers must also consider deducting other payroll taxes, such as FUTA (Federal Unemployment Tax Act) and SUTA (State Unemployment Tax Act). Leveraging payroll software or consultants can significantly simplify the calculation process and ensure accuracy. These tools can automatically handle tax withholding, workers' compensation premiums, and benefits deductions, saving time
